Resignation letter background

This is a fictional case for a letter-writing exercise. The letter author is Hui Liu. All employment details below belong to this exercise.

Hui Liu works as a Product Designer at Northstar Studio, a small digital product design company in San Francisco. Hui joined on July 1, 2025 and reports to Morgan Lee, the Design Manager. Morgan is the recipient of the resignation letter.

The letter is dated October 22, 2026. Hui has decided to resign, and the final working day is November 6, 2026. The letter will be sent as a short email with the subject "Resignation - Hui Liu." The salutation is "Dear Morgan," and the signature is "Hui Liu."

Hui originally joined to work on interaction design and product prototyping. The role has increasingly involved repetitive production work and frequent last-minute revisions, leaving little room for technical learning. Hui feels frustrated by the mismatch and wants to pursue work with more interaction design, prototyping, and technical development. Hui has not accepted another job offer.

Hui wants to leave professionally and preserve a respectful relationship with Morgan and the team. The private dissatisfaction and reasons for leaving are background context only; Hui does not want them included in the letter. Hui also does not want the letter to mention a new employer, blame colleagues, or exaggerate gratitude.

Hui appreciates the weekly design critiques and the chance to learn from colleagues. A brief, sincere thank-you is acceptable. The preferred tone is calm, direct, polite, and professional, without sounding overly emotional or enthusiastic.

Hui is currently working on an onboarding-flow redesign and a shared Figma component library. Before November 6, Hui can organize the relevant Figma files, prepare a short written handover covering progress and open questions, and attend one 30-minute handover meeting. The onboarding redesign is not finished.

Hui has not agreed to complete every outstanding project or provide support after the final working day. These are limits on the handover offer, not complaints to include in the letter.

The requested output is one English resignation email under 100 words. It should clearly state the resignation and final working day, briefly thank the team, and describe only the handover help Hui has agreed to provide. All information needed for this draft is included above.
